FOR Release 12th March 2007:

Run models – not your code!

That's the provocative theme of one session at May's Code Generation 2007 conference to be held in Cambridge.

In the session, entitled "Putting models (not code) at the heart of the enterprise" Tony Clark of Xactium Ltd. notes that enterprise modelling is increasingly becoming a standard technique with more organizations modelling more of their business than ever before.

Models are not limited to software systems; they include: business processes, business goals, and test cases. Tony will propose that organizations should be organized by placing models at the centre of their business and running the business directly off the models. A key technology issue for this to take place is that generating code from models is not appropriate – don't generate code, just run the models!

Tony's session is just one of thirty-five sessions to be led by software industry experts. Visit the Code Generation 2007 web site for more information and to make a booking.
